Spend money on things that will make you a better version of yourself. Planning for the future is like planting trees to be harvested when you no longer need them. Spend money on things that will enrich your life, not just satisfy your present moment. It's not about the money, but about the experience and memories you create. Remember, the best investments are often the least tangible ones. So, spend wisely and make sure you're spending on experiences and opportunities that will positively impact your future. After all, experiences are the greatest wealth.
